

The Chairman and Directors,
Platinum Federal Credit Union
Leaders of Sisters, Brothers and Sisters

Yas Ali Mardai

Today, the 17th February, 2000 is a red letter day in the annals of Ismailis residing in America. It is a momentous occasion that a third Credit Union is being established in the city of Atlanta. This means that now there are three credit unions in America, two in Houston and one here in Atlanta. Pisari and Platinum are Federal credit unions and Peoples Muslim is a State chartered credit union.

This is a great achievement of which every Ismaili should be proud and happy.

On behalf of the Nizam Progressive Federal Credit Union, I convey to you all and especially Mr. Nasar Kapadia and his team, our heartiest congratulations and best wishes for the excellent job they have done in such a short period.

The concept of a credit union is not new to Ismailis who have come and settled here from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and other places. Our 40th Imam Hussain Sultan Muhammad Shah (a.s) was the greatest advocate and exponent of cooperative movement. According to his holy Ferman many cooperative societies were established during his time and we have all witnessed what an economic revolution it brought by improving the economic lives of our brothers? This is a unique power of a well organised and managed cooperative financial institution.

Back home, we used to call such financial institutions, "cooperative credit societies" or "cooperative housing societies as the case may be. There were also trade wise cooperative societies. However, the purpose of such institution is the same, i.e. to promote savings and thrift and provide financial services to many persons who could not otherwise obtain or afford them. Simply put, it means to anchorate the economic well being of the members.
